Q: How to generate a unique token for a device and use it for every call? I'm working on an project that use the Zend_Rfio server. To authenticate a device, this is my authentication flow : Device (Internet server) generates a token "deviceToken" (it must be unique for a device) When the user invoke a device method, the token is put in the request with "authenticityToken" : "deviceToken" Then, the server validate if the "authenticityToken" matchs with the "deviceToken" (from the request) If the server accept that the token is correct, it returns a valid device token, otherwise it return a incorrect token I need to know how to generate that "deviceToken" (and then put it on every call)? I'm working with PHP and Zend Framework. Thank you.

A: The solution is to generate a random value every time that a user use a device token. Random number generation is not part of Zend_Rfio, but easily resolved by using the rand() function of PHP. By using the rand() function, we don't do a time-based validation (ex : minutes from a call to the device). This generate the token :

The device uses a timer. At each call, he generate a random number. After 30 minutes, the token expire and he becomes invalid. This is the default authentication :

$request = new Request(); // create an authentication token from the device // the token generated must be unique for a device $authToken = $request->getAuthenticityToken(); // validate the token if ($request->has($authToken)) { $token = $request->get($authToken); } else { $request->add($authToken); throw new NotFoundException(); } /* * Several application tokens * Should be avoided. * An application token should be used only to authenticate a single user */ $application
